Wood for campfires

ANDREE KEHN/SUN JOURNAL

Ed Buschmann, of Dun Roamin' Tree Farm in Lewiston cuts firewood with his hydraulic processor. Buschmann clears land for planting a new crop of Christmas trees and processes the wood for people who want to have small campfires in the summer. The importance of buying firewood locally to avoid transporting invasive insects has been underscored lately by the impending infestation of emerald ash borers. Forest rangers have been inspecting campers' firewood supplies and are directed to confiscate firewood brought in from out of state.
